"For three or four days I have been traveling through a country like yours, where you need water, and I have learned enough to know that it is worth while for a president to travel. Of course, he could read about your resources and your needs, and by studying books he could get it all into his hauser. head, but when he comes in contact with the people; sees their hopefulness and optimism, he gets a view of a different sort. Then he makes all sorts of resolutions-and, if he is wise, he keeps

At this point a proud father brought his little girl up to the rear platform holding the child up so she could hand a bouquet to the President. It was the dent's hand. Captain Butts and the secret service men broke in, and after the

The President was especially impressed with the children and his delight was manifested at every stop where the little ones received his first greeting and his broadest smiles. This was especially true at American Fork, where hundreds of school children bearing flags and banners waved their greetings as the train waved their greetings as the train

Here, two little girls, evidently twins, were held up to the rear platform to greet the President. "I surely can't tell you apart," he said, "but I hope I shall meet you again some time," said President Tatt as he began his speech. It was to the children that he spoke first, telling them how glad he was to see such bright, cheery faces and to know that the future prosperity of this country depended on such little citizens. His opening sentences were interrupted by a blast from the whistle and the train pulled out with the

There was a selection by the choir, which preceded the regular program, and then, after the announcement by Senator Smoot, the choir sang the sextet song from "Lucia," especially arranged by J. R. Bussard, director. "Blue Daunbe," and the "Pilgrim's "Chorus," from "Tannhauser," were also rendered in a manner which, at the close of his speech, called forth a spontaneous tribute of praise from the President.

In introducing President.

In introducing President Taft, Senator Smoot said it was a glorious day for Utah, a proud day for Utah county and a happy day for Prove, and the applause and others. Not a Partisan Journey.

"It is, I hope, not a partisan journey, and will not be regarded as such. Of course, at times." I have at-tempted to make a journey through the country, of some thirteen or four-teen thousand miles, for the purpose of convincing the people, if I can, that every man, woman and child born or naturalized into this country has a voice and a right to be heard at Washington, and that his interests are the subject of careful consideration by those who represent the government at that place.

"But, on the whole, I wish those who hear me, and those who are good enough to express a welcome, to understand that I do not misconstrue their attitude; that I know they are testifying, by their respect and welcome to me, to their regard for the country, by expressing it to the temporary but lawful head of the government, in order to convey to him and to convince "But, on the whole, I wish those who hear me, and those who are good enough to express a welcome, to understand that I do not misconstrue their attitude; that I know they are testifying, by their respect and welcome to me, to their regard for the country, by expressing it to the temporary but lawful head of the government, in order to convey to him and to convince each other that they are loyal to this

Passing through Castle Gate the train slowed down and the strains of "Hail to the Chief" as played by the band, were nearly drowned by the cheers of 200 children and as many older ones. Here, only a glimpse of the President was gained and again at Soldier's Summit there was a stop of only a minute. No Race Suicide.

"I observe you do not have race suicide in this vicinity—(Cheers and applause)—and I do not object to those expressions if I can only construe them into being those of approval; for out of the mouths of babes and sucklings, you know, we get the facts. (Laughter.) But, to recur to the thought I had in mind. On the whole, at Washington, congress works out, necessarily, a compromise. Consider what it is that we are carrying on. Really, we have to will be forced past the President unnoticed by his aides, but the President unnoticed, and more than once he reached for a hand which had been timidly thrust forward and "missed." It was at the special request of the President that arrangements were made so that he might shake hands with each member of the choir, and to some of them the President expressed again his pleasure at hearing their selections.

Rush for the Depot.

At a signal from Captain Butt the line was stopped, and then there was a rush for the station, which brought the party aboard five minutes ahead of time, and the train pulled out. At American Fork there was another crowd with many children bearing flags and "Hello, boys and girls," was the hearty greeting as the President stepped out on the platform and began a three-minute lesson in patriotism which will be remembered by many a boy

Do you know what that flag means means you are going to stand for your government, your country?"

"Yes, sir." Even if you have to give up your lives, do you understand that, boys?"

"It means you will obey the law; it means you will be good citizens, that you will grow up and look after your families, and you will work as your fathers have done here and make this country rich; is that what it means?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, that is right," said the President, as he centinued. "Ladies and gentlemen, I thank you for your cordial reception. I hope I do not say anything invidious when I say I would rather see the boys and girls than the old men and—of course, there are no old women—I mean the ladies and adults. There is something in the young people that indicates the future strength and security of the country. I congratulate you on your beautiful country and the splendid resources I see on every hand," and the Fresident was still speaking as the train pulled out.

Car No. 11-Representatives of Salt Lake

A Unique Welcome.

As the President's car turned towards Temple hill he caught his first glimpse of the "Y" on the mountain side, with "TAFT" just above, and the newly whitened letters shone brightly in the afternoon sun, giving what the President termed the most unique welcome sign he had seen on his journey. The letters of the President's name were each 60 feet long, and they spread over 351 feet, showing the excellent proportions with the "Y" below, which is 340x63 feet.

The procession, headed by mounted deputy sheriffs and followed by special officers, wound its way past the B. Y. U. and then up past the athletic field over the road recently constructed by the students. All left the cars at the summit of Temple hill, where President Taft was introduced by Senator Smoot to Dr. George H. Brimhall, president of the B. Y. U. Only a few minutes were spent at the cheers which greeted him. Most of his speech was spoken with his characteristic earnestness and apparent sincerity, giving the impression of a dignified executive who had a few statements of public interest to present, and presenting them with quiet force, emphasized with frequent gestures with the right hand controlled the statements of the subject, because at times there is a disposition to trample down law, with the theory that we reach some greater object; but, on the whole, it will be found that the best way to do, only the laws are not right, is to obey
